Epithelial-myoeplithelial carcinoma is a distinctive salivary gland tumor showing both epithelial and myoeplithelial differentiation. It constitutes less than 1% of all salivary gland tumors and is most commonly seen in the parotid gland of the adult. The exact origin of this tumor is still a matter of debate. While most authorities suggest that the tumor derives from multipotent myoeplithelial cells, others argue that it represents a collision tumor of ductal and myoeplithelial cells. The tumor is a low-grade malignancy, with local recurrence and metastasis very uncommon. Its histologic appearance is characteristic, though some authors have recently suggested that the lack of specific morphologic features may sometimes make the diagnosis difficult. The prognosis of this tumor is usually good.

List.net #05 System Cleanup is a small but essential application. It can help you free up disk space by clearing unnecessary files and temporary files. A nice touch is that you can even keep your Windows registry entries untouched. After an initial startup, the program runs a series of checks to find out where the free space on your hard drive lies and displays it in a small window. It also informs you that all user files and system settings remain unchanged. System Cleanup is compatible with 32- and 64-bit Windows operating systems, so you can use it on any computer. You can also use it on external hard drives and USB devices. Once you've found the free space you're looking for, you can select the files you wish to clean up and press the "Cleanup" button. When the task is completed, you can view how much space has been freed. In addition, you can exclude certain directories from the cleanup process and set up Windows disk cleanup. System Cleanup works well, but we wish the interface was slightly cleaner. In addition, a help file would be greatly appreciated. Thank You by Keshav on 4.1.2001 One of the
