Short- and medium-term outcomes after percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) with sirolimus-eluting stents compared with bare-metal stents in the treatment of de novo coronary lesions. The short- and medium-term outcomes of PCI with sirolimus-eluting stents (SES) in de novo coronary lesions compared with those of PCI with bare-metal stents (BMS) are still not well established. We analyzed the clinical and angiographic characteristics and short- and medium-term outcomes of PCI with SES (ptrend) versus BMS (ptrend) in patients who underwent this therapy in our institution. This is an observational, non-randomized study. From January 2000 to June 2004, 407 consecutive patients were discharged with SES in de novo lesions of the left anterior descending coronary artery (n = 130), left circumflex coronary artery (n = 205) or right coronary artery (n = 102). SES were successfully implanted in all patients. They were compared to a similar group of patients treated with BMS (n = 447). The clinical and angiographic characteristics of the two groups were similar. SES were associated with a reduced incidence of subacute stent thrombosis (ST) (SES: 1.5% vs. BMS: 3.7%, p = 0.04) and a trend for a reduced incidence of late ST (SES: 1.5% vs. BMS: 4.2%, p = 0.06). The rates of target lesion revascularization (TLR) at one year were comparable in the two groups (SES: 5.1% vs. BMS: 4.5%, p = 0.6). After a mean follow-up of 13.6 +/- 5.0 months, the rate of the composite incidence of major adverse cardiac and cerebrovascular events (MACCE) was significantly lower in SES treated patients (MACCE: 13.4% vs. BMS: 28.4%, p = 0.003). During follow-up, the rates of myocardial infarction and mortality were comparable in SES and BMS treated patients. Our study suggests that PCI with SES in de novo coronary lesions is a safe and effective treatment strategy. PCI with SES in de novo lesions shows a trend towards a lower incidence of subacute ST and late ST compared to BMS treated patients
